The Federal Government has a responsibility for collecting and disseminating information concerning the source, quality, and distribution of United States water resources. The USGS and other Federal agencies are responsible for collecting, processing, and disseminating this information. The USGS is the primary source of data on the nation's water resources and is responsible for developing and maintaining a comprehensive water resources information system. The USGS provides this information to Federal, State, and local agencies, as well as to the public, through a variety of products and services. These products include water-quality data, water-quality and water-resource assessments, and water-resource information systems. The USGS also provides technical assistance and training to other Federal, State, and local agencies to help them make informed decisions about water resources. The USGS is committed to ensuring that accurate and reliable information is available to support decision-making and public understanding of water resources issues.
The following subject areas have been historically examined by the USGS.
